READING PASSAGE: The Path of a Young Champion

Maya is an eleven-year-old swimmer who trains at the National Junior Sports Academy. Every morning, Maya wakes up at 5:30 a.m. to prepare for her first training session. Being an elite athlete requires intense dedication, hard work, and strict discipline.

"If you want to reach the finals, you must practice every day," explains Coach Harrison. "If a swimmer skips training without a valid reason, they will lose their endurance very quickly."

At the academy, young athletes learn that success is not just about winning medals; it is also about staying healthy and respecting the rules of sportsmanship. Athletes need to follow a balanced diet rich in carbohydrates and protein. They ought to sleep at least nine hours every night so their muscles can recover properly. Coach Harrison always reminds his team: "You shouldn't eat junk food before a big race, and you mustn't forget to stretch your muscles before entering the pool. Skipping your warmup can cause severe muscle injuries."

However, training isn't always intense. On Sundays, Maya needn't wake up early because it is her official rest day. "Rest is just as important as hard work," Maya says. "If I take time to rest on Sunday, I will feel energized and ready for Monday's workouts."

Next month, Maya is participating in the Regional Youth Swimming Championship. If she wins her 100-meter freestyle race, she will qualify for the National Games. Maya knows that if she stays focused and listens to her coach's advice, she will have a great chance of achieving her dream.
